GM has released the MSRP pricing for the 2011 Corvette and overall, prices for all the models except the Corvette ZR1 have increased just $20 over the prices of the 2010 Corvette. For the ZR1, pricing has increased $2,920 to $109,800 for the base model. Two of the most anticipated options for the 2011 Corvette Z06 are the new Z07 Performance Option and the CFZ Carbon Fiber Package. GM has priced the Z07 at $9,495 and the CFZ option comes in at $3,995. These options will be making their debut on the new 2011 Z06 Carbon Edition. Now, pricing hasn't been released yet for the limited Carbon edition, but just by adding up the options we're talking at least $95,000.

Other option pricing shows the new level of customization that GM is working towards with the Corvette. We have the headlamp color overrides priced at $590 and the interior color stitching is listed for $395.

Lastly, the two new sets of wheels for the base coupe and convertible models are $1,850 for the QX3 Chrome Aluminum and $895 for the RQ1 Machine Faced Wheels.

All Corvettes also carry a $950 destination charge which is not included in the pricing of the cars. We now have pricing for Dealer installed Genuine Corvette Accessories. A big thanks goes to Dave Salvatore @ Kerbeck for supplying us with the pricing. If you are interested in ordering a new 2011 Corvette or are looking to deal on remaining 2010's, give him a call at 877-537-2325 or visit Kerbeck Corvette.

GM to let '11 Corvette buyers build own engines

For $5,800 option they can travel to Detroit and assemble it ... with help

DETROIT — Corvette owners could soon be revving up an engine they built with their own hands. General Motors Co. said Monday that buyers who order a 2011 Corvette Z06 or ZR1 can help assemble their cars' high-performance LS7 and LS9 engines. The automaker believes the program is the first of its kind in the industry.

The engines will be built at GM's Performance Build Center in Wixom, Mich., where GM assembles all of its high-performance engines by hand. The facility can assemble up to 15,000 engines per year, GM spokesman Tom Read said.

Read said it will take buyers about six hours to assemble, adjust and clean their engines with the parts provided. A skilled technician will supervise.

The 2011 Corvettes are just going into production and will go on sale soon. Read said the company expects to have customers building their own engines as soon as next month. GM sold 13,934 Corvettes last year, according to AutoData Corp.

GM suggests dealers charge $5,800 for the engine-building program, which doesn't include air transportation but does include one night of lodging. But that's just a fraction of the cost of a Corvette Z06, which starts at around $75,000, or a ZR1, which is more than $100,000.

The engine-building program joins a list of special options available exclusively to Corvette owners. ZR1 buyers can attend free Corvette driving courses in Arizona or Nevada, for example. For a fee, Corvette buyers can also have their sports cars delivered to the National Corvette Museum in Bowling Green, Ky., or watch their Corvettes be built at the Bowling Green assembly plant. Read said the program shows the lengths Chevrolet will go to for its customers. The program could also help build positive buzz for the company, which is planning an initial public offering as early as October.

On June 6, Jay Demerer chaired a Sunday Ride to Jim Thorpe.
